

The Lottery Of Thinking Outside The Box

As individuals and as a society we will have dreams, goals, visions and a way of approach to people and business.

In life, an introduction followed by a firm handshake and a reputable title is not only allegedly gratifying, but it is also the American dream and key ingredient to healthy professional self-esteem.

To reach, interact and excel in person and business many times requires us to think outside the box.

I am not a professional on this particular topic or any other topic for that matter. I do not have a college degree at all, however, what I do have is realtime hands-on life experience and like you and so many others who come from the mud, I am the average individual who mastered how to stand up every time myself or others tried putting me down and or counting me out.

As individuals and as a society we will know that education is key, however, the fact remains the quality of education and availabilities varies based on culture and or class of life in an America to a concerning degree.

To compound concerns today in too many instances in the college community (including those who've graduated), people are incurring or have incurred far too much educational debt (how much depends on the time it takes to obtain the desired degree) following America's formula to graduate entry-level into the global workforce.

One of the many problems is there are far too many graduates who cannot obtain employment in their alleged professional fields after these degrees are obtained. The excuses vary but are not limited to lack of education, overly educated amongst other excuses that we as a society and individually know all to well.

In an attempt to better our global community to be an excelling society, not just a functioning society we must constantly think outside the box.

The lottery winnings reside there.

Written (06/07/16) by Clifton A. Jackson

Your likes, follows, shares, repost of link, tags, and hashtags are sincerely appreciated.

