

Rebellion & the Fears of Ebonics & Uncensored Expressions

Inspired by Ice Cube, Dr. Dre the late Easy E and the entire NWA movement.

The streets are an entirely different society within a society that many believe is the gateway to the underground and economic success.

Street languages and the use of Ebonics (a continuous system of revolving and evolving broken words of endless languages known as slang), which constantly fluctuate like the seconds of the day regardless where you are from.

Slang has gained such recognition that Ebonics dictionaries have been created as an attempt to understand its endless meanings.

The problem with Ebonics dictionaries are by the time such dictionaries are published, in some cases they're outdated and in many other cases the dictionaries are completely obsolete. Why?

The forever revolving and evolving languages are the equivalent to melting pots of cultures that can all speak and understand a universal language. However each city and each hood within the city speak their own languages of Ebonics where the definition of any given word before the slang ingredient is added can completely differ from the word or actual dictionary meaning hood to hood, city to city.

Slang words can also completely differ in meaning based on where you're from, your neighborhood and that also changes daily in many cases by the minute depending on what you are doing, your circle, etc.

The mention of slang is so important today because what many people do not understand, the minority becomes intrigued by it and the majority fear it.

To take it a step further – federal and state law enforcement agencies via their agents, officers, detectives are alleging via their informants, etc., to be professionals on the use and understanding of Ebonics in music, videos amongst other entertainment vehicles now targeting the hip hop cultures. There were never any such allegations or associations to any other music genre.

The truth is no one can never factually claim to be a professional of an unknown forever revolving and evolving language that changes a million times faster than fashion and the minutes of each day.

Street methods and secrets are like corporate and alleged government top classified secrets. However like any other secret over a course of time what's in the dark will eventually come to light.

Regardless the individual or entity formula of success, the streets has always been the primary economic platform since the beginning of time. The majority of the times the poor and middle classes are the job markets targets.

Slavery & oppression has caused so much harm it will take centuries to heal. However, our diamonds in the roughs is we have an uncanny ability to survive, adapt, and excel regardless the conditions or situations.

Our perseverance to overcome has been achieved via simply being tired of being tired and in many cases rebellion.

It is alleged people are creatures of habits and abilities. The mentioned are not birth qualities, they are taught qualities.

The alleged lower tiers of life see and desire everything the alleged upper classes of life do.

Today no culture or race can be legally beaten into submission or all the other inhumane things that were done in the early 1900s dating back. However the illusion of opportunity and equality is alleged to be before us but the mentalities, individuals and structural support of all those who supported superiority complexes or benefitted from oppressing cultures directly or indirectly never died.

In the streets it's hard to graduate a double standard mentality that's clearly evident based on the way we walk, talk, dress or merely look.

As an African American not limited to, we have been forced to teach ourselves so many things to an innovative degree since the beginning of time even when education was a crime not so long ago.

Today we continue to cross barriers because of the birth of hip hop in the 70s.

So not only did I live through and completely understand the NWA movement, today we no longer chant "FK THE POLICE."

Today we feel like and chant "FK YOUR DOUBLE STANDARDS" who still feel "THEY HAVE THE AUTHORITY TO KILL A MINORITY" via murder or the penitentiary.

African American and Latino communities are still feared and continue to be misunderstood in the large scheme of things.

Doors have opened and we have started the process of occupying alleged powerful seats abroad. However it means nothing if we cannot deal with and graduates truths in our own American backyards.

In the trenches we can no longer tolerate the alleged intellectuals who never been in tuned directly or indirectly with the trenches.

In closing a quote from Denzell Washington, "I'm an ordinary guy with an extraordinary job. The illusion of success in only a platform that are afforded to very few and if we are not making things better for the next individual to occupy our jobs and where we came from, then we are not doing our jobs."
